If I end up getting distracted, or falling behind on the work I'm meant to do, there is nobody else to blame but me. I never dreamed of feeling this powerless with my career, until I started running this business. When you choose to be a run-of-the-mill entrepreneur, you will likely never have an excuse to not be busy. - Riyadh, June 28, 2019:

Something is stirring inside the Saudi-backed National Coalition in Yemen — a three-front war against the Houthis, the Saudi-backed former Yemeni president Ali Abdullah Saleh and finally the Iran-backed Houthis. Zaid al-Ajmi, a Saudi Arabian-American who was the regional chief for the Muslim Brotherhood when Saleh was president in the 1990s, told Arab News that the Saudi-led coalition has started negotiations with Yemen's Houthi rebels to "negotiate a solution" to its four-year war against the country. Previously, the coalition has refused to participate in talks until the Houthis release scores of Saudi nationals that they are holding captive. The National Coalition's lead negotiator Saeed al-Saeed announced Thursday that his side will begin talking with the Houthis following a mediation session in Kuwait Wednesday. The Saudi and coalition blockading forces withdrew their troops from the frontlines to the Red Sea port city of Hudaida, he said, and the Houthis will open the border crossings into Yemen, allowing Free Yemeni Army troops and coalition and UN peacekeepers to enter Yemen. “We will negotiate the issues of prisoners, detainees and our presence in the northern and central governorates,” he said. “We will determine the border crossings of the state to have a sovereign free and unified Yemen.” Saeed said the joint committee that oversees the prisoner release will be established by the coalition and the Houthis to determine the fate of each of the captive Saudis. The Saudi-led coalition, which is backed by the United States, had earlier said the issue of prisoners had to be resolved before the Houthis should talk to it. The deal made to achieve “quick” prisoner release and a stabilization of the Red Sea port city of Hudaida was part of a string of talks designed to find “a solution and a way out of the crisis,” al-Saeed said in

be automatically locked until you pay a ransom. This is called "ransomware" or "CryptoWall." You'll see a message on your desktop that says something like: 'In order to be able to use the computer, payment is required. After payment you will be able to access the computer and use it normally. If you do not pay the protection fee, computer functions are locked and the PC will not be usable again until the fee is paid.' If this happens, you will be able to recover the hard drive and the complete data on the PC. Just reinstall Windows, and you will be up and running again. Binary Ransomware:

This version requires an additional screen before being executed. All your files can be encrypted and the encryption tool can be installed into the system to make your files inaccessible. Once the process is completed, a message may appear on your desktop with a word like "Victim" and the dollar amount that you will be required to pay. Your files are encrypted with a program called WinRAR, which is a widely used file archiving and compression program. The program is available for free download on the internet. If you need to stop the process before all your files are encrypted, click the "Stop" button on the top right corner of the window. Click the "Delete" button to remove the program and remove all traces of it. All personal files will be deleted.

Registry Ransomware: This version is similar to the previous version and may require some actions to be performed to unlock your computer. Once a message appears on your screen that says something like: "In order to be able to use the computer, payment is required." Click the "Yes" button. Type
