I knew I had to try it immediately. After all, everyone can design their own icon, cursors or animations, but the idea behind Icon Academy was a bit more. This icon editor offered 3 main features :- 1. The first option was offering predefined templates for icons. So that anyone could start creating a new icon quickly, without needing to spend hours searching for a perfect icon. 2. The second feature was offering 2 collections of icons to choose from. One is a huge collection of 900 icons (for free!), the other contains customizable faces for Windows (for Windows XP), including icons for applications like Windows Live Messenger, Mozilla Firefox, Opera, Skype, Live Movie Theater, as well as many others. 3. The third feature was offering a lot of customization options. Users could style the icon color, pixelize it, add their own text on it, etc. Only the final options were not included in the application, but you could add them by registering to their web site. Icon Academy wasn't perfect, but it really came pretty close. Fast-forward 2 years and the surprise came. Microsoft added a new icon editor in the new Windows 7, called Windows 7 Icon Design. Looking closer at this application, it seems to be quite a bit different from the one I used back then. It has the same 3 main options, but these options were enhanced, and several new ones were added. The most important thing is that the application now fully supports Windows Vista, and has been recompiled to take advantage of the new OS features. For starters, the application is much simpler to use than before. The layout is less cluttered, the tools are easier to use, and a lot of "hidden" options are now there to use.
