Clipboard assistant that helps you remember what you have previously copied to the clipboard. Clippy is a new Windows application, mostly coming with Windows 10, that will pop up when you want to paste something. The moment you click the button, the app will suggest to add information to the clipboard. It can be a photo, a name of a website, a URL or even a coupon code. The selection gets then saved to the clipboard, leaving the application. There are multiple ways of how to use this utility to save you time, depending on your needs. For example, you can enable Smart Clipboard that will 'remember' the most common contents. The buttons of the application can also be customized, so you can add to the available options: From left to right, keyboard shortcuts, Photos, Clip Photos, Photos from apps, Clip from apps, Videos, WebClip, Contacts, Evernote, Word, PDF, Excel, PowerPoint, Tumblr, Google Sheets, Twitter, Reddit, Screenshots, Google+ and Hangouts. If you don't need all of the available features, you can get them manually by using the AppSource website, where you can download a batch of apps (mostly preinstalled by Microsoft) for free. Clippy is available as a free application, and will require Windows 10 Creators Update. My favorite application for the Mac is now Paint Masks, and it looks so much like Photoshop's filters. The masks that are available in Paint Masks are actually their own app, but the idea behind it is still the same. What you see when you open the application for the first time is the list of the different filters, and you can browse the ones that are available right from there. Also, each filter is designed for specific image files, so you'll need to choose the one you want and apply it. Once applied, it will be possible to move it around, change its opacity, adjust the size and more. Everything is super easy and intuitive, and you'll be able to see the results in the main window. Final note Paint Masks is a free app, and you can always check if it's available in the Mac App Store. Also, if you're familiar with Photoshop's filters, you'll definitely notice a similarity, since it's made by the same company. The 2edc1e01e8

Quack is a small and simple Firefox extension that allows you to perform a google search without leaving the browser. The results are shown in the same tab. The search engine DuckDuckGo is used by default but there are also configuration options to change the behaviour. The app is also able to open the search results in your default web browser. Digg is a social news aggregator that originally introduced the "article voting" system. The goal of Digg was to enable the users to vote the stories in different categories and most of the time the top stories in those categories would be pushed to the homepage, making sure the site's popularity increases. This was a controversial move, as everyone who could use Digg could see how the voting system works and more people started to use it to promote their sites and to learn more about what's happening in the web every day. Today, the concept behind Digg has been changed and the main thing that is to be expected from Digg is the community-driven stories to be pushed to the homepage. This means that you can find a story without having to participate in a voting process, although the more votes a story gets the higher it will be pushed to the homepage. The left menu has a button that lets you see the stories that are currently on the homepage, and there is also the search button that lets you find something you are interested in. The stories are displayed in a tag form, and if you click on one of them, you will see the original page. It's a nice little piece of software that doesn't do much, but is a good alternative to a dedicated Digg client, which was recently discontinued. Digg Description: Digg is a web application which allows you to view and vote on the stories which are submitted by the users. These stories can then be pushed to the homepage. The Pit is a desktop application that offers a complete GUI application to be used for easy sign in and sign out process of various sites. The goal of the program is to be used with the website iGoogle, although it is not limited to this only. At the moment of writing this article, the main UI offers the following features: Allows easy sign in and sign out of various sites (iGoogle, Google, Live, etc.) It will store the passwords which you have to provide while signing in or out The main window will display
