Perfusion of the medulla oblongata with 0.6 M mannitol improves neurological outcomes after acute spinal cord injury in the rat. The aim of this study was to examine whether the medullary perfusion with 6% mannitol (0.6 M; 0.6 MP) or dimethyl sulfoxide (DMSO) could ameliorate motor and sensory function in a rat model of spinal cord injury (SCI). Female Wistar rats (n = 10 per group) were divided into four groups: group SCI-sham, SCI with vehicle (SCI), SCI with 0.6 MP, or SCI with DMSO treatment. Motor function was evaluated by the Basso, Beattie, and Bresnahan scale and inclined plane test. Sensory function was assessed by the electrophysiological method. Phrenic nerve conduction was also measured. The relationship between histological spinal cord damage, the activation of microglia, and the number of apoptotic cells were examined by immunohistochemical staining. The mean inclined plane angle in the 0.6 MP treatment group was significantly higher than

Determining the level of knowledge to which a person is exposed to when performing a particular task (i.e., knowledge base) is often difficult. In some instances, a knowledge base may be very large, and thus determining a level of the knowledge of the individual based on the knowledge base is difficult to determine. For example, a knowledge base may describe a system, or some subsystems, of a car. An individual may not be able to accurately determine whether the knowledge of the individual is outdated or not, because of the size of the knowledge base. The disclosure made herein is provided for identifying knowledge base errors, etc.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to self sealing closure devices for food containers and particularly to devices having an inner liner and an outer shell which are frictionally sealed together but which may be separated by a tear-away tab when the liner is removed from the shell. 2. Description of the Prior Art Self sealing closure devices for food containers are well-known in the prior art and are typically used with child-resistant closures which are designed to be operated only by an adult. Such child-resistant closure assemblies require operating force which may 04aeff104c
